Known as the "handyman's secret weapon," duct tape is incredibly versatile. It can serve multiple purposes such as repairing equipment, sealing gaps, and creating makeshift tools. Ensure you have a good supply of duct tape in your survival stockpile.

2. Paracord

Paracord is a lightweight and extremely durable rope that has a multitude of uses. It can be used for building shelters, creating traps, fishing, and even making emergency repairs. Its versatility makes it an essential item for any survivalist.

3. Zip Ties

Zip ties are small, lightweight, and incredibly useful. They can be used to secure equipment, create temporary restraints, bind gear together, and even organize your survival stockpile. Make sure you have a variety of sizes and colors for different purposes.

4. Super Glue

Aluminum foil has various survival uses. It can be used to make improvised cookware, create reflective signals for rescue, insulate shelter, and even start fires. Keep a roll of aluminum foil in your survival kit for its multiple applications.

6. Signal Mirror

A signal mirror is an essential item for attracting attention during emergencies. It can reflect sunlight over long distances and help search and rescue teams locate you. Make sure you have a durable and lightweight signal mirror in your survival gear.

7. Sewing Kit

A compact sewing kit is valuable for repairing torn clothing and gear. It can also be used for creating improvised sutures and basic first aid in case of injuries. Include a sewing kit with different thread colors and a variety of needles in your survival stockpile.

8. Bungee Cords

Bungee cords are elastic cords with hooks on each end, and they are excellent for securing items. They are particularly useful for bundling gear, attaching items to your backpack, and creating temporary shelters. Ensure you have a set of bungee cords in different sizes and strengths.

9. Hand Crank Radio

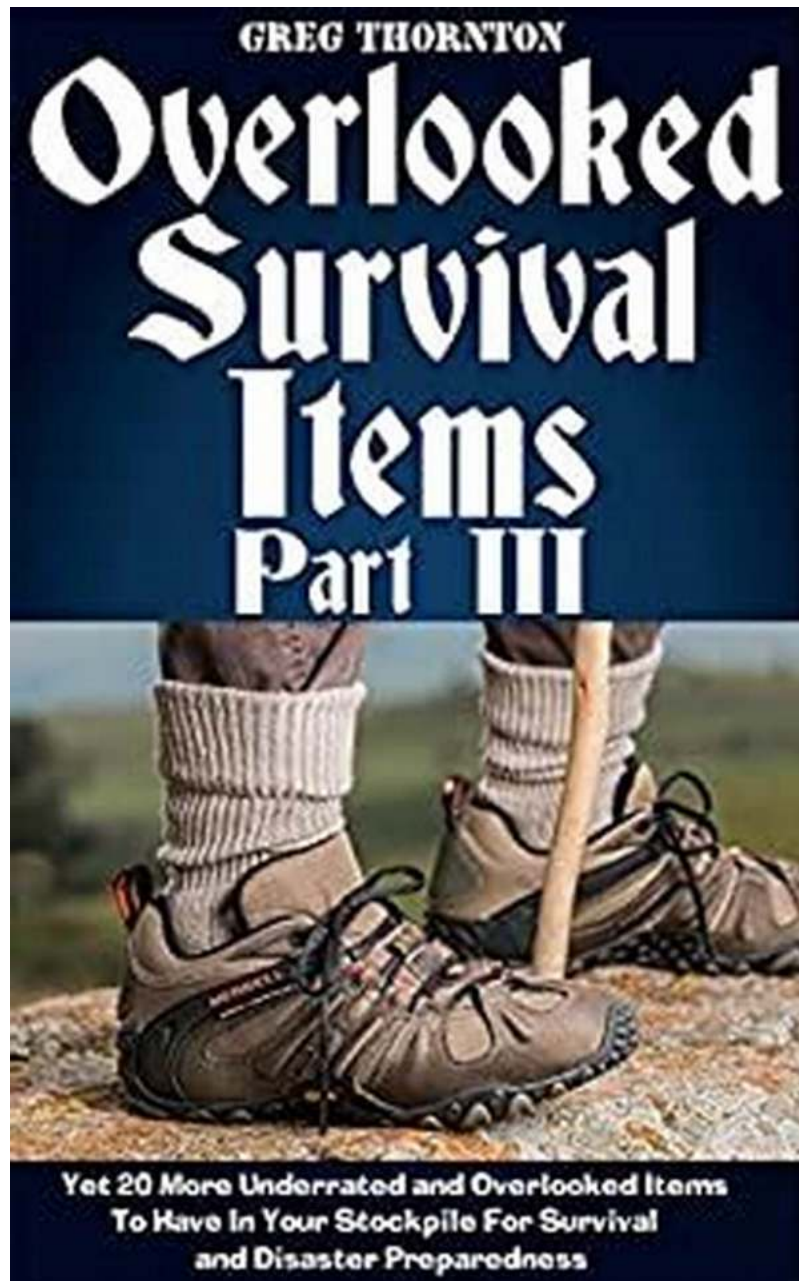

A hand crank radio allows you to stay informed even in situations without electricity. It can provide weather updates, news broadcasts, and crucial information during emergencies. Look for a portable hand crank radio that also has a built-in flashlight and phone charging capabilities.

10. Plastic Sheeting

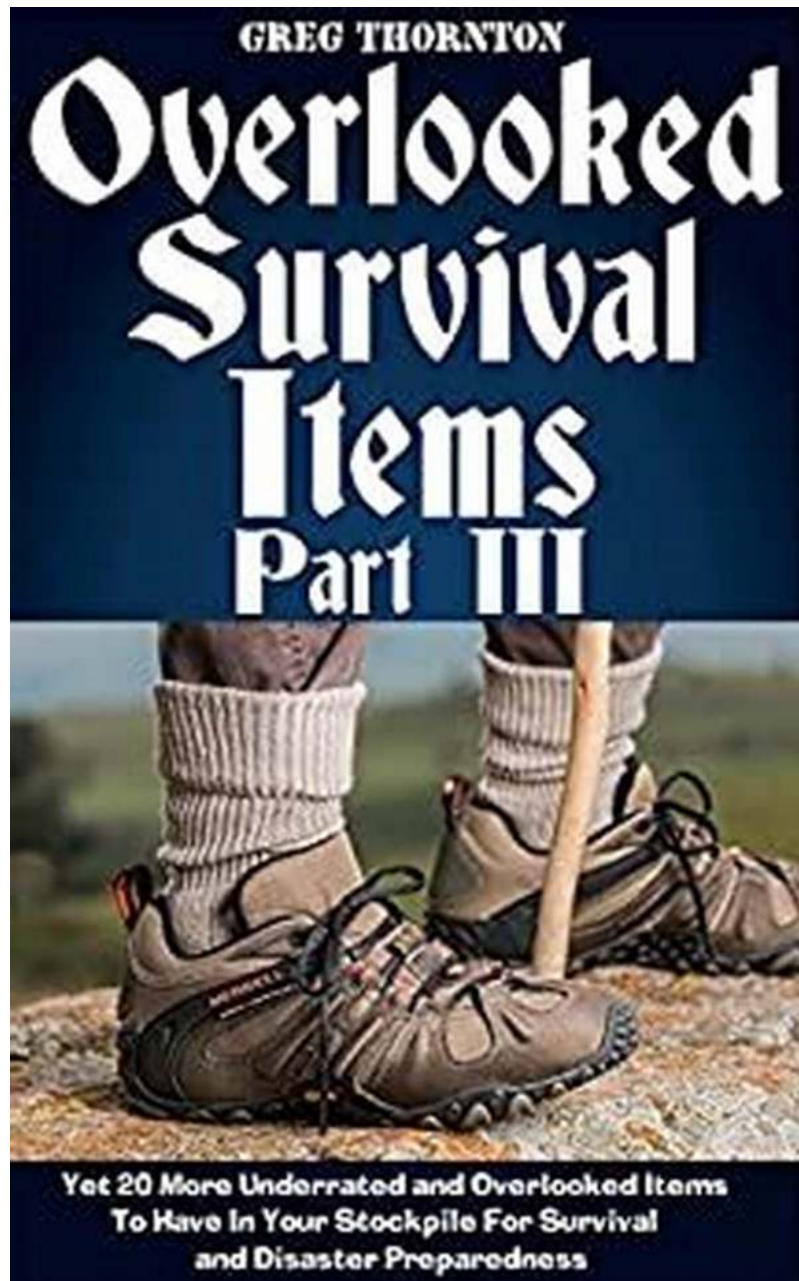

Plastic sheeting is versatile and can be used for creating emergency shelter, collecting rainwater, protecting gear from the elements, and even storing food. Get thick, heavy-duty plastic sheeting that can withstand harsh conditions for added durability.

11. Safety Pins

Safety pins are small, lightweight, and have various practical uses. They can be used for repairing clothing, securing bandages, creating temporary shelters, and even catching small game for survival. Keep an assortment of safety pins in your survival kit for emergencies.

12. Wire

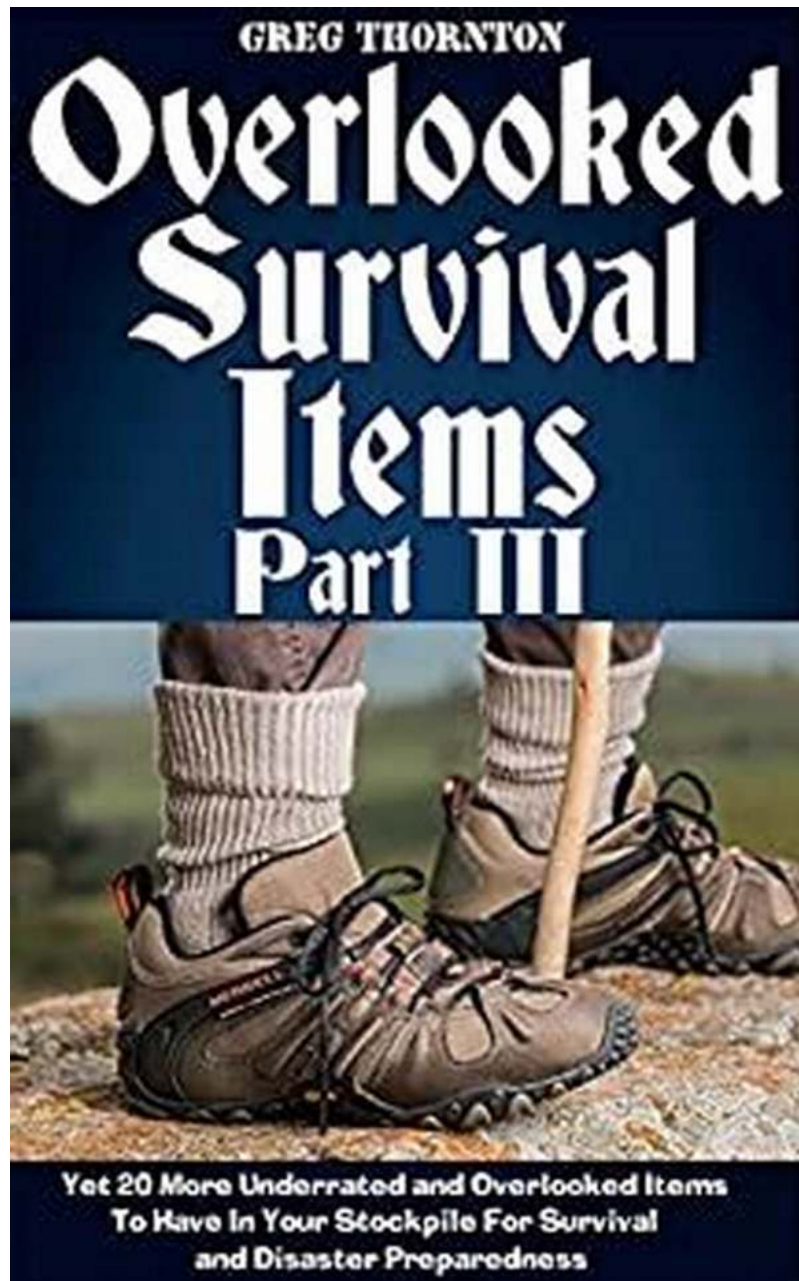

Wire is incredibly useful in survival situations. It can be used for building traps, repairing equipment, creating snares for fishing, and even constructing shelters. Pack different types of wire in your stockpile, such as stainless steel and copper wire, for increased versatility.

13. Solar Charger

A solar charger enables you to recharge your electronic devices using solar power. It can be a lifeline for staying connected in emergencies and ensures that your crucial devices, like flashlights and radios, remain functional. Invest in a high-quality solar charger with multiple charging ports.

14. Trash Bags

Trash bags have numerous uses in survival scenarios. They can be used as makeshift ponchos, emergency shelters, waterproof storage for gear, and even as an improvised water collection system. Choose heavy-duty trash bags that won't easily tear.

15. Multi-Tool

A multi-tool is a compact device that combines multiple tools into one. It is an invaluable item for versatility and convenience. Look for a multi-tool with a knife, pliers, screwdrivers, can opener, and other essential features.

16. Bandanas

Bandanas are versatile pieces of fabric that have numerous uses. They can be used as a headband, face mask, makeshift bandage, water filter, and even as a fire starter. Include several bandanas in your stockpile for their multiple functions.

17. Plastic Bottles

Empty plastic bottles hold immense value in survival situations. They can be used for storing water, creating DIY water filters, collecting rainwater, and even starting a fire via the lens effect. Collect and store empty plastic bottles in your stockpile.

18. Cash and Coins

In critical situations, access to cash and coins becomes crucial. Keep a stash of small bills and change in your survival kit as they can be used for buying supplies, paying for transportation, and accessing services in emergency situations.

19. Maps and Compass

In a world without GPS or internet connectivity, physical maps and compasses are indispensable. They can help you navigate unknown territory, plan optimal routes, and find essential landmarks. Include detailed maps and a reliable compass in your survival gear.

20. Fishing Gear

Fishing gear is essential for obtaining food in survival situations near water sources. Pack a lightweight fishing rod, fishing line, hooks, and assorted tackle in your stockpile to ensure a reliable food source.

By adding these 20 underrated and overlooked items to your survival stockpile, you will significantly enhance your chances of weathering any critical situation that may arise. Remember, preparedness is the key to survival, and having a diverse range of tools and resources is crucial.

20 Overlooked Survival Items!

This book is a sequel to another book I wrote called “Overlooked Survival Items.”

In that book, I outlined twenty different everyday household items and talked about how those items could be repurposed into a variety of different survival and disaster preparedness uses.

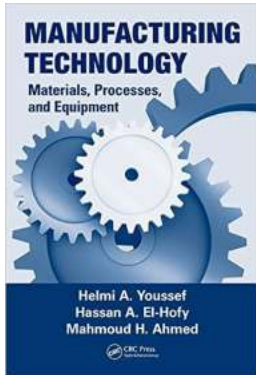

In this book, I’m going to do the exact same thing, only with twenty more different items that I didn’t cover before!

The specific items that we will discuss in this book include the following:

Belt
Calendar
Cat Litter
Coffee Filters
Drinking Straws
Egg Cartons
Frisbee
Games
Garden Hose
Glass Bottles
Glow Sticks
Grocery Bags
Hatchet
Q-Tips
Safety Pins
Sewing Kit
Shoelaces
Shower Curtain
Slingshot
Soda Cans

As you scan through this list, you will notice how each of these items are things you probably have in your home already. Soon, you'll find out how each of them will make your survival efforts easier regardless of what catastrophe comes your way.
