It's love, adventure, history, a real story about two young people in love, married in Gibraltar, purchased a Triumph Spitfire in London. With no plans, a yearning to travel, limited funds, they followed their instincts to cold Scotland, romantic Paris, WWII beaches of Normandy, walled cities of Spain, and crossed to North Africa. They visited cities of mystery, intrigue, adventure, and Arab delights in Tangiers, Marrakesh, Algiers, Tunis, Tripoli, and Cairo. The chapters have adventure, romance, and exciting history rolled into one, like a treacherous mountain road in Morocco, mobbed in Tunisia, almost drove off a cliff in Algeria, lived among student rioters in Libya, had their auto confiscated, was offered eight camels for

Walter's wife, Ruth, almost buried alive in Egypt, and more. With students they visited King Tut's Tomb, were married Egyptian Style, and faced Lenin in a Russian Camp. They took a barge up the Nile to Abu Simbel. Ruins of ancient cities and WWII cemeteries were visited. Veterans, local people, and victims provide firsthand accounts of their experiences. Original paintings of world-famous artists in classic museums were visited, observed, and enjoyed. Yet, at the same time, they encountered countless different situations, challenging adventures, history-making events daily for three months and 9,000 miles. The couple left Egypt, crossed the Mediterranean Sea to ancient Greece, communistic Yugoslavia, mountainous and musical Austria, celebrated a birthday in Germany, visited a Concentration Camp in Dachau, and toured communistic East Berlin. Finally, after a daring escape from the Soviet Police, they made their way to Freedom in Hannover, relaxed in Paris in April, smelled the tulips in Holland, saw unusual events in London, and the grave of Lawrence of Arabia in England. After an SS France voyage to New York, they were married in Milwaukee, honeymooned in Big Sur, California, and settled in San Francisco. The book also tells of the couple, Walter and Ruth, meeting people of different ethnic origins, learning how these people lived and survived after WWII. Stories of love, anger, remorse, heroism, and sympathy were shared by their fellow human beings. They appreciated the sharing and giving nature of people to perfect strangers who returned the same in like manner to the young Americans. As a result, the adventures and lovers became intimately acquainted. They learned to enjoy and tolerate their differences and were now even more in love as they completed their 17,000 miles, Six-Month Honeymoon Odyssey in the City by the Bay, San Francisco.
