Dear Insurance Company,

I had to thank you an apology.
I'm sorry for being somewhat of a pain. I can hear the impatient, confused, and even angry in your voice when we communicate. You've made it clear that my condition is a huge inconvenience to you, and I never intended for it to be this way.
I'm sorry that no matter how many times I've explained my symptoms to you, you still don't understand exactly what the problem is. I'm sorry that my doctors and specialists haven't been able to clearly explain to you what even the specialists, you yourselves have ordered (and) seem to have given you the right medicine.
I'm sorry that despite having all these treatments and the many reports on hand, supporting treatment approaches, that you are still unable to give the best results of my condition. I don't imagine how frustrating that must be for you.
I'm sorry that I need to consult my doctor prior to following any of your recommendations, and I'm sorry that they don't always agree with you. I do this because it's my priority to do what's best for my health and well-being, even though I know you don't look it that way.

Sincerely,
