Constructing Argument

Argument is not an assertion. Argument has anatomy

1. IDEA/ASSERTION

The point you're trying to make that you believe to be true

2. ANALYSIS

The logical and analytical explanation to prove your idea. Reason.

3. EVIDENCE

Something like a statistic, a survey, a case study, or an analogy to give Greater credibility to your idea and analysis.

4. LINK BACK

The Conclusion. So What.

The Secret Weapon to Shatter Your Opponents' Arguments

Debating is an art form. It requires meticulous preparation, logical reasoning, and effective communication skills. Among the countless debate tactics available, one stands out among the rest – the curved argument. Mastering this technique can transform you into a formidable debater. In this article, we delve into the world of debating with Andrew Bushard, a renowned expert in the field.

What is a Curved Argument?

A curved argument is a clever rhetorical device that takes advantage of the opponent's perspective to deliver a powerful counterpoint. Instead of directly opposing your opponent's argument, you slightly shift the angle of attack. By subtly altering the context or point of view, you create doubt and dismantle their position.
