Dalonie is a young girl growing up in the streets of New York City learning how to live in a world without a Mother while being raised by her grandmother and feeling abandon by her father and his new family. She's young and wants to have fun but everywhere she turns trouble seems to find her. Her and her friends lived a care free life until it all changes and their lives are split apart and Dalonie is forced to pick a side. Although she loves and sympathizes with her friend she has no choice but to turn her back on her causing her to live her life in depression feeling like the world is against her. In the midst of the craziness going on with her family and friends Dalonie finds a love she never knew she needed and a life she longs to live in. She just wants to be a regular teenage girl and live her summer carefree but everywhere she turns she's faced with her reality. Being a motherless child and being raised by a childless mother her and her grandmother lean on each other for support to combat the daily guilt they feel of losing the one person that fused a union between them. Hardened by her environment but delicate to the world you see the Decadent life of a young black teenage girl.
