For a girl who lost her mother at such a young age, Harlow Wood still thinks she's pretty lucky. Sure, her dad is hopeless with money and things at home are not always easy, but she is smart, hardworking and has loyal friends who look out for her. Harlow is trying to put the past behind her and be an ordinary girl, living an ordinary life, one day at a time.

That all changes when James Hunter walks into Harlow's Classics class late one Fall afternoon. Harlow's life starts to spin out of control. James is handsome, good natured, kind and much to Harlow's surprise, seems to like Harlow as much as she likes him.

Harlow realises that she is beginning to change, to grow up. With James she begins to experience waves of intense feeling that she is unable to control. Other changes are also happening to her; strange things occur when these strong feelings overwhelm her, odd, unexplained things that Harlow chooses to ignore, too caught up in James' gorgeous green eyes to realise the danger that is all around her, that is closer to her than she could ever realise.

James Hunter is part of her past and a part of a sad mystery that still haunts their home town of Dillon Point. The town tongues still wag with rumours of the disappearance of two young women; Daria Wood and Rhiannon Hunter, from the high, jagged cliffs that surround the town's Lighthouse. They left behind no clue to the reason or motive for their suspicious deaths, just two devastated, bewildered husbands who still blame each other for the tragedy.

For a small town, Dillon Point has more than its fair share of secrets; Harlow and James' secrets bind them together while their father's share secrets that will tear them apart. Darker, more sinister forces than they could ever imagine have plans for Harlow, dangerous plans. Harlow, it seems, is far from ordinary, irrevocably linked with the haunting seascapes of Southern Scotland and their whispering, eerie voices; soon James and Harlow are not only fighting to be together but fighting for their very lives.

The past has always haunted Harlow, now it is hunting her. To survive, Harlow must uncover the past and be ready to face the perils of her future. She must confront her feelings and the truth about the strange changes that she is experiencing. Growing up is never easy but in the sleepy little town of Dillon Point it can be murder.
