The Beginnings

The Buttermilk Canyon Concerts were the brainchild of a visionary group of music enthusiasts who sought to introduce a fresh and vibrant music scene to Saudi Arabia. Recognizing the need for a platform to showcase local talent and foster cultural exchange, they conceptualized a series of concerts that would transcend geographical boundaries and bring together artists from various genres and backgrounds.

The inaugural concert took place in 1989, amidst the breathtaking landscapes of the Buttermilk Canyon, which lent its mystique to the event. This natural amphitheater, with its towering cliffs and lush greenery, provided the perfect backdrop for an enchanting musical experience. As the sun set over the canyon, the stage came alive with an eclectic ensemble of musicians and performers, setting the tone for what would become a memorable musical journey over the next few years.

This book described the history of an open air classical music program, using a desert canyon in the vicinity of Riyadh as a concert hall, during the years 1989-1992. I recount happenings surrounding these events which were enjoyed by many hundreds of expats as well as many members of the "Desert Shield" allied soldiers before the first Gulf War. Religious fundamentalists and associated vigilantes eventually succeeded in forcing Saudi authorities to ask that these concerts be terminated. Names and identities of those who participated in the organization of these wonderful concerts have been obscured or changed.
