A study of the Chinese concept of the 'dao' ('the Way'), this unusual book is set against a 10,000-mile unescorted trip through the China of the 1980s when tinkling bicycles in the streets--no cars, no high rises and a typical income of $20 a month--were the norms. Searching for the 'dao' of China, the author also explores the concepts of 'te' ('innate power') and 'wu wei' ('effortlessness') as they apply to the ancient and modern culture, as well as to one's daily life. On a meditational journey that took him to temples and monasteries, Schwartz seeks to describe the experience of meditation from 'inside,' ultimately relating his lifelong involvement in zazen to the Confucian structure of Chinese society. An award-winning playwright, Schwartz is the author of the novel 'The Extraordinary Pufffish of Calaveras County.' As a teenager, the author became so fascinated with Chinese philosophy and poetry that he went on to study Mandarin and classical Chinese at Harvard. He lives in a redwood grove in California with his partner and their Queensland Heeler.
