Babs and Steve met on a blind date in Dallas, Texas.

Within weeks they were crossing the Saharan Desert in a Mercedes UNIMOG on a 3500-mile journey from Tunis to Togo through seas of powdery-white sand, blinding sandstorms and moon-like vistas of naked lava, their compass pegged on due south.

Deep in the Sahara, they joined Moulay for communal couscous on the rug of his dusty oasis home. In Niger a Fulani nomad took them to his mud hut for sweet tea and offals. In Burkina Faso the police detained them for running security roadblocks and in Togo an angry border guard accused them of shooting John F. Kennedy. They visited a voodoo witchdoctor who shared his secrets of a happy marriage and in an rural village watched as the Africans chased a fierce lion from a full moon.

Without GPS or cell phones, by compass and instinct, Babs and Stephen in their steel-shelled tortoise crossed the skull of Africa in a two-month odyssey over the greatest, harshest unforgiving desert in the world and through the grueling live-and-death poverty of five countries.

Written in two voices, 'hers' and 'his,' "The Lion In The Moon" is the once-in-a-lifetime adventure of a Santa Fe adventurer who meets a Dallas socialite and how they survived the desert and each other.
