In the early years, the Soviet Union showcased their exemplary technique, organized gameplay, and stellar teamwork, establishing them as the team to beat. Their dominance in the championship set a formidable benchmark for other nations to aspire to.

Changing of the Guard (1967-1987)

The late 1960s and 1970s marked a significant shift in the balance of power in European Volleyball Championship. Other nations began to rise and challenge the Soviet Union's supremacy. This period witnessed the emergence of teams like Poland, East Germany, and Czechoslovakia, who put up fierce fights against the Soviet Union.

Poland emerged as a dominant force, clinching the championship four times between 1975 and 1983. They displayed incredible agility, power, and exceptional teamwork, captivating the volleyball community with their thrilling performances. East Germany and Czechoslovakia also made their mark, winning the championship in 1971 and 1975, respectively.

New Contenders and Exciting Rivalries (1987-2019)

The late 1980s saw a shift in power dynamics once again, as new contenders emerged to leave their mark in the European Volleyball Championship. Italy, a nation renowned for its passion for sports, started to dominate the competition, winning nine championships between 1989 and 2015. Their creative and flamboyant style of play, combined with their strong technical skills, made them a formidable force on the court.

Russia also emerged as a strong contender during this period, securing the championship four times. Their powerful spikes, solid defense, and exceptional blocking abilities made them a nightmare for opposing teams.

Other nations like Serbia, France, and Germany also made their presence felt in the championship, adding a new level of excitement and unpredictability to the tournament. These teams showcased immense talent, pushing boundaries, and challenging the traditional powerhouses.
