A summary of one guy's desire to be a writer, but really part-drunken, part-nostalgic ramblings from a regular guy about a great time in his life.

If you've stayed at a backpacker's hostel for at least a week of your life then you'll be able to relate to a good chunk of this book.

With a couple of grand and a desire to see what London had to offer, a young Australian guy moved to the city in the middle of the GFC. For three-and-half months, he called the Dover Castle hostel home, where he lived, laughed, talked, drank, played cards, watched TV, and drunkenly dreamt with hundreds of people from all over the world.

Along with his temporary friends, he sampled many different beers and spirits, nearly had a brush with the law, experienced the infamous holiday romance until he ran out of money.

All of which he thought would be good fodder for a book - this book.
