Before we delve into the File This Fish With The Shy Group technique, we must understand the significance of this unique group. The Shy Group holds the key to unraveling the best-kept secrets of the fishing world, granting access to the most coveted fishing spots and techniques.

Unveiling the File This Fish Technique

Fileting a fish is a well-known practice that involves removing the edible flesh from the bone. It allows for easy cooking and enjoyment of the fish. However, File This Fish takes this technique to a whole new level.

Picture this – a serene lake where the sun is beginning to set. The fish are lurking underneath the water's surface, seemingly hesitant to bite. This is when the File This Fish With The Shy Group technique becomes a game-changer.

The Shy Group has discovered that fish have unique personalities and behaviors, making them more receptive to certain techniques than others. The File This Fish technique involves analyzing the shyest fish within a group and tailoring your fishing approach to mimic their elusive nature.

This intricate technique requires patience and observation. By closely observing the behavior of the shiest fish within a group, you can adapt your fishing techniques to build their trust. By replicating their movements, bait preferences, and even adjusting your casting techniques, you significantly increase your chances of a successful catch.

Filefish have a protruding mouth with some very sharp teeth, similar to a triggerfish. They have narrow, compressed bodies with rough spiny scales and a front dorsal fin that can be raised or lowered. When the fin is raised, it resembles a file, which some reference sources say is the inspiration for the name. Others attribute the moniker to the sandpaper-like quality of the scales. Whatever the true origin, filefish are another group of highly entertaining critters on the reef.

They eat a variety of things, but mostly algae, seagrass, soft corals and anemones. Scrawled filefish seem to have an affinity for munching on branching fire coral. I have also seen scrawled filefish pecking at a moon jellyfish in mid water.

Whitespotted filefish are usually very shy, and I have found it takes a bit of patience to get them oriented for a good photo. Their color changes from orange to a dull yellow and gray when they display the white spots.

Next on the elusiveness scale are the orangespotted filefish. They are quite a bit smaller than the scrawled or whitespotted varieties and tend to hide among the gorgonians and peak out at you before they bolt to a more secure spot.

To me the most difficult species to spot are the slender filefish. Not only are they quite small, typically about three inches or less in length, but they are quite adept at changing color to match the gorgonian they are hiding behind. We have seen them frequently on on top of the mini-wall on Deep Molasses.
