Rachel Westbrook has it all: looks, money, prestige. What she doesn't have is a good reputation. She's tired of being the rebound girl. When her friend Vicky proposes a blind-ish date with Adam Marshall, Rachel thinks she might actually have a chance to turn things around. Then she sees Adam checking out his ex-girlfriend Heather. She knows how to play this game. She's played it before. But Adam doesn't want Rachel to be just his ruse to get over his ex, he wants to help Rachel change her reputation. They make a deal to fake a relationship until they can both move on. Now Rachel's falling for an unavailable guy. She focuses on her three-person basketball team to keep her sane as they prepare for a tournament they need to win. Except Adam's on her mind more than he should be. Adam opens up to her, and she's not sure if it's authentic or all part of the game. When tragedy strikes, can she turn to him for a shoulder to cry on? Or would that only lead to more heartache? As Rachel discovers things aren't always what they seem, she has to figure out if what she has with Adam is legit or if she really is just another rebound.
