Formerly a part of the USA Today bestselling anthology "The Darkest Hour - Tales of WW2 Resistance"

With only a piece of chalk and a pot of paint, can a thirteen-year-old boy restore the glory of France?

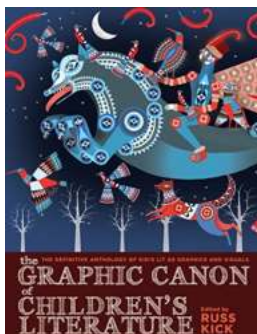

When Charles Mercier sees the victorious German army goose-stepping along the Champs Elysees on a warm June afternoon, he is at first impressed by their display of power and military might. However, after an altercation with his schoolteacher and hearing the voice of inspiration on the radio, he is soon reminded that as the son of a missing French soldier his allegiances should be with the country of his birth.

With only a couple of sticks of chalk, a pot of paint and a determination to make his father proud and France free again, he embarks on his own personal mission to rid Paris of Nazi oppression.
